A. Read the passage carefully :

The koel is generally considered the most musical among Indian birds. The bird has been the inspiration of great poets and writers. In the spring, all through the day and night, one can hear the koel singing. At the approach of winter, the bird becomes silent, and in winter it migrates to warmer parts. The koel is a very strange bird, as it never builds its own nest. Between April and August the mother bird goes in search of a crow's nest and there it lays its eggs. It leaves them there for the crow to hatch. The eggs are pale grey with brown speckles and look very much like a crow's eggs. The unsuspecting crow hatches the koel's eggs and feeds the baby koels along with its own young ones! The male koel is shiny black with yellowish-green and crimson round the eyes. It's he who sings beautifully. The female is quite different in colour and is a dull brown with white spots and lines. Koels like to live in large leafy trees and they can be seen in groves of trees in many parts of India. These birds eat fruits and caterpillars and other insects.
